

Flood031014Boulder north

This is the Jefferson County DES office with the Monday, March 10, 2014 update on the flooding status for Boulder, Basin and North Jefferson County.

The National Weather Service is predicting 100% precipitation for the next 24 hours with a potential of 1 – 4 inches of snow accumulation over night and clearing after noon on Tuesday. Continuing mild temperatures expected through the week.

This part of the County does not have any road closures at this time but please use care and if the road crews are working, give them the space they need. If you are a property owner with approach culverts, please clean them out and remove any snow that might be piled near them. As you take measures to divert the water flow on your property, be a good neighbor and do not cause additional problems for those downstream.

There are sandbags and sand available at the Jefferson County Shops in Boulder and Montana City. Please bring your own shovels. If there is a pile filled, please check and see if they are available for the taking. Do not take those that someone has filled for their use. Take only what you need.

Safety first – do not attempt to drive through water flowing across any roadways or driveways as you do not know what has happened to the road beneath the water. Also watch for and report any down power lines.

The County Public works crews and Sheriff's deputies are maintaining a close watch on all areas of the county and addressing problems as they arise.

If you have problems or see concerning conditions, please call the Sheriff's non-emergency line at 225-4075.

Please stay tune to this station for updates or changes in conditions.
